CHAPTER 21—NOVEMBER 4

NEW YORK!

Cherry jumped out of her bunk and pulled on clothes hastily —I know—not even her uniform. Forever after, the sight of a ship's bunk would make her imagine how cold it was on the U. Kyes in the sixties and how it made her shiver. But she must—the ferry must see what's going on out there! A tug tooted somewhere close, and the small friendly sound hurried her on.

At first, after the electric light inside, she thought it was still dark. But after a few minutes she could see the banks of the river and make out the dim outlines of buildings. She hurried aft and looked at the Statue of Liberty, a pale blur in the half light. But there she was on her island, the new lady holding aloft the torch of freedom, mentally Cherry published her. Lights twinkled palely along the shore, and ferry s plying over to Jersey hung rows of fairy lanterns. The Coromandel was hardly moving, and over everything hung the frozen hush before the dawn.

Walking forward, Cherry slipped and nearly fell on the deck. Then she discovered the thin film of ice that coated the planks, the rails, the heads, everything. It was like walking on glass. She climbed down on the forward well-deck and stood peering forward, trying to see the skyline; but all she could see for a little while was the soft, twinkling lights in the lower stories of the buildings and the busy little ferries. Sounds were muted and yet strangely clear; she could hear a train somewhere, and suddenly she could smell smoke, the smoke of a great city across the bay, pure air. New York was only a dim ghost ahead, unreal as this hardly-born morning; but in that gulf of smoke it came to Cherry, real and exciting and throbbing with hidden life.

SHE leaned her gloved hands on the rail and pulled up the fur collar of her coat, too excited to feel trouble. Tweaking of her nose. The ship seemed to be moving noiselessly of her own volition, as ghostly as the land on either side of her. But Cherry knew that everywhere in her was hidden activity, just as it was in that unreal city ahead; in the galleys and pantries, in the engine-room and on the bridge. There were men there, and busy hands. On the bridge the steady tramp of feet made her raise her eyes to the figure standing guard over her, rather pacing guard—up there. She knew it was Rory because it was his watch; he was a bulky, completely anonymous figure, muffled in sweaters and bashelaves and high boots from head to foot. He needed them, she realized, with a four-hour watch in this climate.

He called down, from a few yards above her head, "Good morning, Miss Mayne. I wouldn't stand long in this if I were you, with your head uncovered. You'll get frostbitten."

She could see his face now. Every minute it was getting lighter. She smiled and said simply, like a child, "I want to see New York."

He smiled back and began unwinding a long blue woollen comforter that was like a cocoon under his lumber jacket, and threw it down to her. "Of course you do. Here, catch this. Wrap it around your head. Sorry I can't ask you up here. The Watch is much better. But I might name you a cup of coffee, Bates!"

"Yes, sir!" The man appeared like a genie out of the gloom.

"Get us two cups of coffee, will you?"

"Right away, sir."

Bates disappeared, grinning. Mister King ordering coffee for two on the bridge was a rare treat, Bates was slightly disappointed when he returned quickly with the coffee and was told to take the other cup to Miss Mayne below.

THIS morning there was no fog. The air was crystal-clear; it loomed as if the buildings were being painted in it—as if it were a sky-blue background against a sky-at washed blue, by some invisible painters.

She said breathlessly, "Oh, it's all like a fairy tale! And I thought New York was a horrible place—hurrying, bustling, dark and overcrowded. The Big Business city. But this—I wish I could paint! I wish I could keep it forever! Photographs give you no idea."

Rory looked down at her small face framed in the dark muffler, like a peasant or a nun. She would make a beautiful nun. There was faith and hope and charity in the clear eyes and soft mouth and proud little chin. There was more beauty here in Cherry than in all the whole skyline of New York, for Rory. And in a few weeks she would be Lady Fenhampton, probably. He loved Sir Hugh; he would realize his incredible luck. Not now, of course, when he was enchanted with the child, but in a few years, when he would be seventy and Cherry only in her early forties, it he did, she would have to be an old man's darling.

It was a revolting thought.

Impulsively Rory said, so low that only Cherry could hear, "I'd like to show you around the city. I think you'd be a nice person to share this modern magic with. Only I'm not much good as a guide, and I don't suppose I'll have the chance, anyway."

Cherry smiled, "I should love it. But Mr. Holmes is very doubtful about shore leave. We may have to anchor in the river."

"We're going alongside, all right. We'll be tied up in half an hour."

Unbeknownst to Cherry an inbright was soon in progress behind her back. Terry waylaid Captain Brigson and begged permission for Rory King to accompany him and Cherry to the zoo. The captain agreed and the boy rushed to tell Rory.

King smiled, then he agreed when the boy exclaimed: "She likes you—she said so. Oh, please come with us!".

CAIRO SYRUPMAKERS

lowered to Collins for 5 and to Lang for 4 more. Again Drew on a quarterback sneak plunged over for a first down. Offsides brought the Bulldogs a loss of 5 precious yards. Roberson then broke through center for another first down. A pass from Drew to Washingham was completed to the Bulldog 4 yard line but the play was called back to the 12 and Cairo was penalized 5 yards for offsides. Cairo then took to the air for two passes but neither one clicked, and Thomasville took the ball on their own 20.

Following a no gain reverse, Carr reversed to Scaife who scooted around end for almost 10 yards. Newton on a quarterback sneak won Thomasville a first down. Scaife on the next play was held to no gain by Collins. Scaife back reversed to Carr who passed to Mitchell for 10 yards Scaife back again picked up 3 more followed by an offsides penalty against Collins. Easley brought Scaife down for no gain on the next play. Clandy in punting formation passed to Mitchell but the pigskin fell short of objective.

The quarter ended with Cairo leading 7 to nothing.

Fourth Quarter:

With 1 yard to go for a first down Clandy passed but it fell incomplete. Clandy then punted to Drew on the Cairo 10 who brought it up to the 33. The only gain in the next three plays was made by Lang who broke through center for 6 yards. Drew punted and the ball was downed on the Bulldogs' 40.

Carr again took to the air passing to Mitchell but incomplete. Carr reversed to Scaife but no gain was registered. Clandy again back in punt-formation but ball went to Scaife who crashed through for 3 yards. Clandy punted to Cairo's 30 but play was called back and Cairo was penalized for offsides giving Thomasville the needed yardage for a first down. Following a no gain end run Carr passed intending the ball for Mitchell but Drew again intercepted on the 45. Lang completed the advance started by Robertson's 2 yard gain by an end run of 12 yards. Lang taking Drew's lateral broke around end for 3 yards. Drew back in punt formation broke around left end for 12 more. Penalty against Cairo for holding carried the ball back 15 yards but this loss was made up by Drew and Lang on two end runs. But the penalty threw them too far from the first down mark and Drew jolted out of bounds on Tville's 17.

Thomasville was trying desperately to complete a pass as the final minutes of the game ticked away. Defensive tried three but all fell incomplete and the game ended with the punt to Drew on the 50. The final score: Cairo 7, Thomasville 0.

NAVY FAVORED 20 TO WIN OVER N. DAME AT BALTIMORE

Baltimore, Nov. 4.—(AP)—Despite what statistics say, the boys who follow the game have made Navy the favorite in today's grid clash with Notre Dame.

The Tars, cognizant of their big opportunity to sink the underdog Irish and not wahting for confidence, know they will have to be on their toes to win.

Notre Dame head coach Elmer McKeever—"if we beat this Navy team, we'll be the luckiest outfit in the land."

And quote Commander Orin Hagberg, Navy mentor — "the Irish will unleash everything."

But perusal of the probable line ups gave some 67,000 ticket holders visions of an eye-for-an-eye tooth-for-a-tooth fray.

Hal Hamberg, Tar passing ace is still ailing from a leg injury but if he is any better at all, it will be only to heave a pass in some tight spot.

CHATHAM FLIERS AND TEXAS CHRISTIAN MEET AT SAVANNAH

Savannah, Ga., Nov. 4—AP—Chatham Field's Fliers tackled their biggest football objective of the season today in the shape of the Texas Christian University's Horned Frog eleven.

Coach Dutch Meyer of the Frogs didn't have anything to say about prospects, but observers judged the Southwestern Conference eleven as a top heavy favorite.

BUFFALO WILL SEEK TO INCREASE EXPORTS IN NEXT WAR STAGE

Washington, Nov. 4—(AP)—British officials have informed the United States that the United Kingdom intends to drive vigorously for increased exports in the Pacific stage of the war, it was learned today.

To push up exports so cash can be obtained for needed civilian imports the British are discussing with American officials proposals for relaxing regulations which they maintain hamper their foreign trade.

Both British and American officials affirm that lend lease or similar goods will not be exported for sale by the British. However, it is extremely difficult to trace the origin of all materials in finished products.

The British say they have been turning down possible foreign trade because of the possibility that some lend lease material might be involved. With tentative lend lease estimates for 1945 at about this year's expected 10 billion mark, the London government is said to feel it can be more lenient with its own manufacturers, without relaxing precautions against re-export of lend-lease.

Macon, Ga., Nov. 4. (AP)—Ted Stribling, son of the late W. L. (Young) Stribling, heavyweight fighter, is making a name for himself in another sport—football. Stribling, a member of the Lanier High school Poets, kicked three placements for points after touchdown last night, running his season total to 21.

CRIMSON TIDE IS FAVORED TO WIN OVER BULLDOGS

Birmingham, Ala., Nov. 4. (AP)—The absence from the Georgia backfield of Al Peri, on the sidelines, and the good right arm of Alabama's Harry Gilmer are expected to be the betting odds which make the Crimson Tide a one to two touchdown favorite over the Bulldogs here today.

Gilmer, an All-Southern selection at Woodlawn High here last year will serve as Alabama captain today.

The Tide's first string fullback Norwood Hodges, will not start but probably will see some service.

A sellout crowd of 21,000 is expected to attend.

NATIONAL FOX HUNTERS WILL END CONTESTS AT PADUCAH TODAY

Paducah, Ky., Nov. 4. (AP) — The National Foxhunters Association prepared to end its week-long field trials here today with the final cast of the all-age hunt.

Scores on more than 20 hounds will be listed by judges this afternoon.

White Dells, owned by J. W. Meggs, Marshall, N.C., took the lead in the event yesterday with a total of 180 points and Mary Stribling, a member of the Lanier High school Poets, kicked ville, Ohio, ranked second with 166. The third dog was Sweet Jane, owned by Dr. Mitch Casper Louisville, with 146 points.

To The Pare Of The Innoc

You are responsible for their being in this world. You, and you alone are responsible for their future welfare. They have no one else to look to for succor and protection. They cannot vote ... and you only can protect them at the ballot box. They are dependent entirely on you for protection and guidance in these perilous times. This is a colossal obligation.

We ask that you think not once but twice, before casting your ballot, yea thrice, before you condemn them to the tender mercies (?) of Sidney Hillman, Earl Browder, old Tom Pendergast, Frank Hague and others of the same kidney, on November the seventh.

+ + +

We ask that you think some more before condeming these little innocents to the tender mercies (?) of a gang of politicians, who for the sum of one thousand dollars, cash on the barrel head, offer to sell their birth-right.

We beg you not to condemn the future of those little innocents to a corrupt gang of highjacking politicians, whose sole purpose in keeping Mr. Roosevelt in the White House is to retain themselves in power, in order to eat the bread that belongs to your child.

We ask that you consider the extra dollars you are handling in this so-called prosperity. Remember these are borrowed dollars, all of which will have to be paid back with interest, out of your and that innocent's future earnings. Also bear in mind that each and every one of these extra dollars are
